place everything together properly.

As formerly stated, when Forcest attacked Athens, Col. Miunis, with the cover. Mr. Clark had a bottle of largest portion of the regiment was out on a reconnoissance, having started from Athenson the 21st day of September, 1864, and going down in the general direction of Fiorence.

While he was at or near Lawrence burgh, Tenn., which is near the State line. Forrest passed from Florence via Rogersville to Athens. Col. Minnis aimed to return to Athens, but on coming to Roger-ville, he found a force had passed him and left him in their rear, and at this time there was a light skirmish between small detachments from each command. The Colonel then could only change his course, which he did in the direction of Sulpbur Trestle, Alabams. On the 24 a of September he again started for Athens. Captain E. Goddard, with his company, was in ad vauce, and met the enemy in a cornfield, where a short skirmish followed. which revealed the fact that it was a heavy force of the enemy fronting them, and the gallant Colonel was Tres le This was a fortification built the railroad, and was most unfortunate he Kennebec Journal was for sale. fort was located on a rise or knoll at editor of the paper and bought it. It was only a short time until Colonel Lathrop fell. Assistant Surgeon Frederick Wagner, of the Third, went to his almost life iess form to render medical assistance Colonel Minnis then took command of the entire force, and it was only a short time until he was paralyzed from the effects of a she i. through his shoulder. Col. Minnis again ratifed and assumed command. Capt. Jubu H. Morton was outside the tort, walking with his eabre under his arm, a passing tail struck the hill, knocking the blade out of the scab bard and sending it some distance in trout. Another took effect to the forearm, passing between the two bones. He then went lute the fort, and lote a small building used as a hopital for surgical aid. Finding no surgeon he again stepped to the door when a cannon ball passed by him in the door, earing things up at a fearful rate to the house. It appeared that death was facing him at every turn. Lieutenant George E. Curton, of Company "G, was killed outright. Sergeant W. A. McNutt had his carbine by his side. A piece of shell struck bim, cutting off fruits this season his small, and if I remember rightly, the next or third fingers, knocking the stock from his gun and lodging in his thigh. Af er the fight was over the surgeon took it out., when it was found to weigh over a pound Corporal A. W. Rose, of Company "E." was severely wounded.

A number of others were killed and wounded but I have not their names, owing to the confusion following and the capture of the regiment. The battle lasted over three and a half over hours, when Forrest demanded a surrender. Upon examination it was found that the ammunition of our command was exhausted, so the demand was acceded to, and an gallant a regiment with as brave commander as ever buckled on a sabre, became pris oners of war. The regimental color bearer was Andrew E. Fowler, of Company "L," a mere youth, whose home was in Newark, New Jersey. The brave boy stood to his place, holding up the banner and cheering the boys around him, until he had a mere battered flagstaff with a few tattered strings remaining to the splinters, and he only took it down when he became a prisoner. Another member of the same Company had been drilled in the artillery service. Some guns were in the fort manned by a few colored men who did not manage them as effectively as they should be. Our man took charge of them, working and fighting, until he was stopped by the flag of truce, doing most off-ctive work. In the surrender the officers were allowed to retain their side arms. The rebel chieftain passed some high comdiments upon the bravery Minnie and his command, fighting so long and stubbornly under such disadvantages. The regiment with the entire forces were next sent in the direction of Fiorence attended by a regiment of rebels as guard. A man with a $6000 diamond on his shirt bosom leaned over a hen coop in a Cincinnati market and a hungry hen picked off the jewel and swallowed it. The thief was soon cabbase.
